What is the Ketogenic Diet?

The ketogenic diet, or keto for short, is an eating plan consisting of low carb, high fat, and moderate protein meals with the goal of training the body to rely more on using fat as fuel versus glucose.

The ultimate goal of adapting a keto lifestyle is to accustom the body to enter a metabolic state that does not require a person to significantly reduce calories, rather decrease or minimize the amount of carbohydrates (a main source of glucose) and yet feel satisfied after a meal.

The keto diet is becoming a popular eating plan due to its many health benefits such as:

- being a more effective weight loss method
- better control of sugar, especially for diabetics
- promotes brain health
- helps increase energy
- decreases hunger pangs
- is great protocol for treating epilepsy
- helps normalize blood pressure and cholesterol
- helps clear up skin problems
- and has also become an integral part of cancer treatments.

For women specifically, one of the major benefits of adapting a keto lifestyle is hormone balance; whether you are in the fertile years and trying to conceive or going through menopause and wanting to lessen the symptoms.

Regardless of the reason why, remember that healthy fat is our friend and not the enemy that we have been taught to believe.

Tips for Starting Keto

Feeling lost on where to start? Here are four important tips to get you started.

1. Plan your meals ahead. By planning meals ahead, you are less likely to stray from your goal due to overwhelm or lack of time to cook.

2. To keep carbs limited, you want to AVOID:

- Grains such as wheat, corn, rice, and cereals.

- Sugars such as honey, agave, maple syrup, and all processed sugars.

- Fruits high in fructose such as apples, bananas, and oranges.

- Tubers such as potatoes and yams.

3. Do ENJOY:

- Meats such as fish, grass-fed beef, lamb, free-range poultry, and eggs.

- Lots of leafy greens.

- Dairy (preferably from grass-fed cows).

- Nuts and seeds in small quantities.

- Fruits such as avocados and all berries.

- Alternative sweeteners such as stevia, monk fruit, and yacon.

- Plenty of fats such as coconut oil, olive oil, avocado oil, tallow, ghee, and minimally processed dressings.

4. When possible, opt for organic versus conventional products. Organic foods are free of pesticides, additives, hormones, and antibiotics, which over time can cause further health problems.

Let's Get Started

Eating keto should be fun and stress-free. That is why in the next few pages, you will find quick and simple meals as well as snack ideas. Snacks and drinks are optional: if you feel you are not getting enough fat then you may want to include in your day. Otherwise, the easy-to-follow schedule will provide the perfect platform for meal planning, becoming simpler over time, and maybe even spark your creativity!

Additionally, you will find in each recipe, a macronutrient (macro) count to help you keep track of how much you are eating at each meal.

It is advised that you either keep a physical (paper and pencil) food journal of what you are eating (this may help to pin-point problems with foods, digestion, etc.) to make sure you are eating enough to keep you satiated.

There are also several mobile device applications that breakdown macros for you and allow you to make notes regarding your meals for the day with the convenience of transferring data to other applications or devices. Whichever method you choose, food journaling is important to ensure you achieve your desired goals.

Closing Thoughts...

The ketogenic lifestyle is not a one-size fits-all nutritional plan. Although it is advertised as a low-carb, high fat diet, with a suggested maximum of 20 carbs per day, there is a key point that is commonly missed and makes a major difference in results: keto is NOT the same for men and women.

Being the complex and unique creatures that we are, keto should be tailored based on YOUR nutritional needs and health conditions. I invite you to visit us at www.ketolifestyleforwomen.com to learn more!
